TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE CENTER STRATEGY

Annette Crisanti, PhD, is a psychiatric epidemiologist and faculty member of the University of New Mexico Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences. Her research aims to address behavioral health disparities in rural communities and among vulnerable populations by developing, implementing, and evaluating innovative approaches to treatment, including peer-delivered services. Ms. Crisanti has extensive experience with the Patient-centered Outcomes Research Institute (PCORI) and was the principal investigator on a three-year PCORI-funded comparative effectiveness study of patient-centered trauma treatment for PTSD and substance misuse.
